

The Latest Jewish Pope

You won't at first understand why I am leading with this, but bear with me. You know how they have those testimonials at Youtube of people who have died and come back from the beyond? I have watched a lot of them and I always wonder why none of them have asked their guide or St. Peter what it was all about. We hear a lot about a tunnel of light and infinite love and all that, but these people never ask any good questions. Just once I would like to hear from someone who said, "Yeah, OK, but what is the meaning of life? Why did I just go through that? What was it all about?" I begin to have a sneaking feeling the answer would be something like this:

You know that game "what's wrong with this picture"? You are given a picture and have to spot all the things that aren't right.

Well, life is like that, but instead of one picture, it is your whole life. You have to figure out what is wrong with it. You get one point for everything you spot over 80 years, say. Whoever spots the most things wins. Wins what, you will ask. Wins a chance to advance to the next round. The gods need to know how observant you are. So your judgment and discernment are being tested. If you aren't paying attention, you will be sent back for another try. If you are, you will pass to the next game. That would start to explain why this life is such a trainwreck. It has to be, because if it all made sense there wouldn't be any flaws for you to spot. No points would be on the board. Let that idea simmer as we move ahead.

I showed you here that all the Supreme Court justices are crypto-Jews, and we find the same thing here. It isn't hard to see, for anyone who knows anything about history. The surname Prevost outs him immediately, with no other digging. The Prevosts have been tightly linked to the Jews for centuries, just do a simple search on "Prevost Jewish", which takes you to the Wiki page of 19th c. French journalist Lucien-Anatole Prevost-Paradol, whose father was a Halevy. We then check the Wiki page for surname Prevost, finding the very famous author Abbe Prevost, who—like the current Pope—was pretending to be a Catholic priest. How do I know? His father was Lieven Prevost. Lieven=Levy.

You will stop me there and say, "C'mon man, Lieven is just some town in Holland!" Nope, that's Leuven and it is in Belgium. The Lievens are one of the oldest and most aristocratic families of Europe, going back to Gerardus Livo of Riga in 1269. Later they became Russian Princes. Before Livo, they were Vikings from Konigsberg who founded Kievan Rus. So they are as ancient as the Romanovs themselves. If you search on these Lievens, you are told they took their name from the Livonian knights, a subset of the Teutonic knights, but if you ask where they got the name Livonian you come up with nothing but a runaround. Some say the Livs were a local Baltic tribe, but that is absurd. But given they were Teutonic knights, it isn't difficult to figure out that it has probably been changed from Levonian, to hide the link to the Levant, Levi, etc. They would prefer you not make that connection, though I have previously done it with the Teutonic knights.

The Baron Lieven was a governor under Catherine the Great, which is interesting because we are about to see her a second time, linked to another Prevost. Tsar Nicholas made the Lievens princes a couple of generations later. One of them married Swedish noble Freiin von Benckendorff, daughter of a Graf. These are the Benckendorffs who soon married the Princes von Croy and Princes von Salm-Salm as well. Freiin changed her name to Dorothea and became Dorothea von Benckendorff, best friend of the Empress Maria Feodorovna, wife of Tsar Paul I. Maria was a Wurttemberg. Later Dorothea moved to London when her husband became ambassador. She was a great favorite at court and is rumored to have slept with Metternich and Palmerston. Despite that, or perhaps because of it, she became the foremost Russian diplomat in the West, far outshining her Lieven husband, being close to both King George and the Duke of Wellington. So now you know.

Let's return to the Abbe Prevost. He started out as a Jesuit, but ended up attacking them in his novel Manon Lescaut. He was banned from France for obscenity, heterodoxy, and various other things, fleeing to England. He fled Holland to avoid creditors and was later imprisoned for forgery. He was a famous libertine. So why would such a person become an Abbe? The usual: Operation Chaos. All part of a long project to sow discord and schism. This is what these families do. So don't try to argue no one would pretend to be a priest. They have been doing it for centuries.

Also see Jean-Leon de Prevost, another French priest of the 19th century. His father was the very wealthy supplier of uniforms to Napoleon's army. He was one of the founders of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, allegedly a Catholic charity organization, but he actually came out of the Ministry of Education, not the church.

As you see, he looked a lot like the current Pope, with a very short square face. He founded St. Vincent de Paul with Frederic Ozanam, who they admit was Jewish and not a priest. Ozanam was actually a cat's paw of Count Francois-Rene de Chateaubriand and Charles Forbes Rene de Montalembert.

There is Chateaubriand. You have to laugh. I almost need no other evidence. He outs himself thoroughly in that one portrait. He comes from a line of shipowners and slave traders, ie Phoenician

Navy. The hand in the vest tells us that, as if we couldn't tell from his face.

Montalembert was a d'Alembert and a Forbes, as you see, from the Forbes barons of England. The Forbes were close cousins of the Gordons, Erskines, Campbells, and Stuarts, taking us straight to the top. Perhaps you need a visual on these Forbes as well:

They make it so easy, don't they? And no, that photo is not stretched.

The Prevosts also became baronets in two lines in England. One of them, Augustine, became one of the top British generals against the US in the Revolutionary War. His son married a Phipps and became baronet. His mother-in-law was a MacLeod. Who else is a MacLeod? Trump's mother. Thepeerage.com scrubs this Jane MacLeod, mother-in-law of Prevost, probably to prevent us from making that link directly. But now you know why Pope Prevost was tapped during the tenure of Trump. It was no accident. Also no accident the Pope's brother is a big Trump fan: all part of the current script. Cousins tickling one another under the bedsheets.

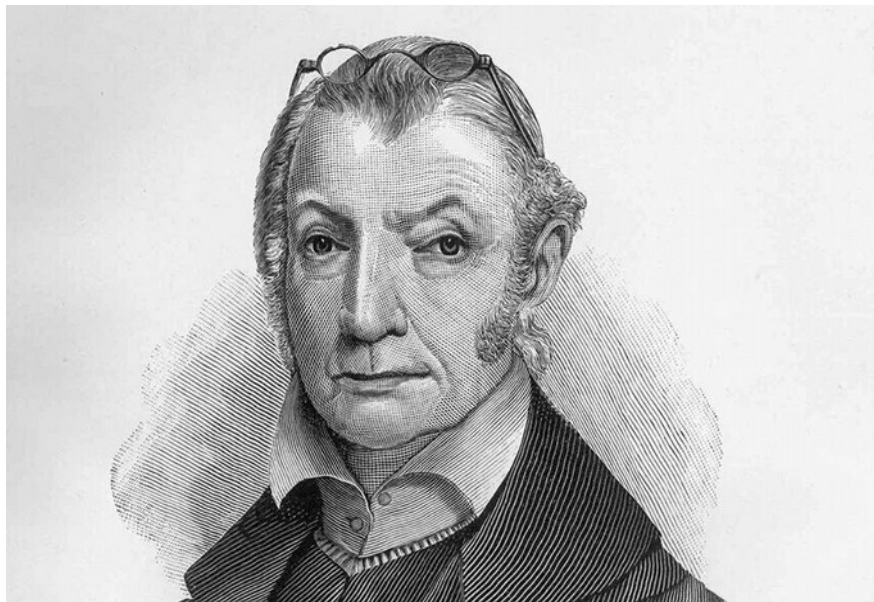

This 1st Baronet Sir George Prevost became Governor-General and Commander of all British Forces in the Colonies. The Phipps link us to Sir Constantine Phipps, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and his first cousin Sir William Phipps, who we have seen before. He was the first governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony, so we saw him in my paper on Salem. He is the one who established the witch trials.

I also remind you that Phipps is a variant of Phillipps, and that the Phillipps/Phillips/Philips are also crypto-Jews. We saw them in my paper on Karl Marx, since Marx was a Phillips himself. So this is all coming together beautifully, as it always does.

The 6th Baronet Prevost in this line, Sir Christopher Gerald Prevost, proves my point since his wife was Dolores Hoffmann, daughter of Beatles photographer Dezo Hoffmann. Dezo worked with Hemingway and Robert Capa, so he was another major spook.

But let us return to General Augustine Prevost. He married Anne Margaret Grand, daughter of the Chevalier George Grand, Baron Esnon, a very rich banker from Amsterdam and of course a Jew. Augustine's mother was Louise Martine, and her father Gideon was a rich banker of Geneva, also mayor of Geneva. So also Jewish. Also of interest is that Aaron Burr's wife Theodosia Bar(s)tow had previously been married to Augustine's brother, Lt. Col Jacques Prevost. I remind you again what Aaron Burr looked like:

I hit him in my second paper on Jefferson. Returning to that reminds us we found there that Augustine Prevost was linked to Talleyrand's wife. There I show that Talleyrand was yet another of these cloaked Jewish priests, being a bishop and his father an archbishop. But again, Talleyrand was famously anti-clerical, meaning he was assigned to the project of destroying the Church. Just like the current Pope.

Who else have I got for you? How about the famous French chemist Charles Prevost, whose mother was a Zimmermann. The Prevost reaction is named for him.

Also see Jean Baptiste Prevost de Sansac, Marquis de Traversay, from the very old Prevosts of Sansac who had been king's men for centuries. This guy interests us because despite dying in 1831, he was said to be of Creole origins. Who else is said to be of Creole origins? Oh, that's right, the current Pope Leo. Jean Baptiste's family were the Governors of Martinique, where they owned vast sugar plantations and thousands of slaves. So again, Phoenician Navy. His mother was a Duquesne, descended from Admiral Abraham Duquesne-Guitton, who became governor of the Windward Islands.

You may also want to look up the later Fritz Duquesne, son of Abraham, an alleged spy for Germany during both World Wars. His mother was Minna Joubert, and you may wish to spell that Jew-bert to tell you what is going on on his Wiki page. Like the rest of these people, he was a pathological liar, and most of his bio is now in question, even the mainstream admitting that. What the mainstream hasn't seen fit to question is the Duquesne spy ring, which was allegedly broken up by J. Edgar Hoover in 1941.

Note how many were allegedly convicted by the FBI. 33. You have to laugh. How many years do you think Duquesne was sentenced to? C'mon, you know it. 18. I can't continue without telling you a bit more about this guy. Despite allegedly being a Boer from South Africa, he was in New York by 1902 working for the New York Herald. It was still run by Bennetts at the time. He also became Teddy Roosevelt's personal shooting instructor. By 1914 he was supposed to be a German spy, but his cover was blown by 1915 and he was sought by MI5. So what did he do? He fled back to the US under an alias and continued on. Makes sense, right? Also making perfect sense is that he contacted Senator Broussard under his own name and asked for a job. What? Broussard hadn't read in the papers that Duquesne was sought as a spy? Finally he was arrested in 1917, but for insurance fraud. They soon recognized him and were preparing to send him to England, but he feigned paralysis, so they sent him to Bellevue Hospital instead. Not sure why they couldn't ship a paralyzed prisoner just as easily as a non-paralyzed prisoner, but don't ask these stories to make sense. Duquesne disguised himself as a woman and escaped, sort of like De Gaulle had done. And Stalin. And hundreds of others in stories just as stupid as this one. By 1925 he was back in New York working for RKO under Joseph Kennedy. Because, of course he was. They admit everyone knew it was him. He was finally arrested again in 1932, but MI5 was no longer interested, because the statute of limitations had expired. No really, that is what they decided to go with. The judge also threw out the charge of prison breaking (we aren't told why) and released him. In 1934 he became an intelligence officer of the Order of 76, supposedly a pro-Nazi organization (but really another FBI front). At the same time he was working for the WPA. Nazi admiral Canaris, head of German intelligence, contacted him directly and he became a German spy again. Since of course nobody would have been watching him after all that.

But let's return to Jean Baptiste Prevost, son of a Duquesne. He became a Freemason at age 18 and a French admiral during the American Revolutionary War. Later he was the Minister of the Russian Navy. Yes, the Russian Imperial Navy, where he was known as Ivan Traversay. The only way to explain this is that he must have been a cousin of the Empress Catherine, a Romanov. So again you see the connections of these Prevosts.

Also see Pierre Prevost, a close friend of Rousseau. Also a close friend of Dugald Stewart, who was of course a Stewart, giving us that again. Stewart's mother and father were both Stewarts, and he founded the Royal Society of Edinburgh. These Stewarts were all clergymen, but not very good ones since they much preferred mathematics and philosophy to religion. They were Freemasons, which also clashes with their claims to have been Presbyterian ministers of the Church of Scotland. Or should. Dugald Stewart, from this line of pretend ministers, was a professor of mathematics and philosophy at the University of Edinburgh, where he continually argued against Christian precepts. In the same way, Pierre Prevost was from a line of wealthy pretend clergyman from Geneva (so these are the same Prevosts), but he also broke that line at the same time, becoming a philosopher and physicist. He is most famous for being among the first to understand that all bodies are radiating heat, even cold bodies.

So that's who the Prevosts are. Pope Leo's paternal grandmother is a Fontaine, and that is also a big red flag here. She is from Le Havre. The French press is already admitting she is from the noble Fontaines, since the Pope is related through her to Catherine Deneuve.

Proving again that he didn't come out of nowhere. He is from many noble lines. This connection to Deneuve is especially interesting since her genealogy is half-scrubbed, with the maternal Deneuve and Schenardi lines hidden. Deneuve took her mother's name, but her maternal line is hidden, telling us the usual thing. Wikitree gives up one name Geneanet doesn't: Dehais. The reason the Deneuves are scrubbed is probably that they are really Belgian Deneves, a wealthy family of bankers. They are still running things, see Paul Deneve, former CEO of Yves Saint Laurent and vice president of Apple. He is now a Sloan Fellow at Stanford University.

Also worth reminding you is that Deneuve had a child with that guy, Roger Vadim, real name

Plemiannikov, a rich Russian Jew who—despite looking like a troll—also married Brigitte Bardot and Jane Fonda. I guess he was good at feeding them chocolate. Deneuve also married David Bailey, whose mother Gladys is hidden. No maiden name, but Gladys is a Jewish name. Deneuve is listed in the British peerage, but we have no idea why. None of those she listed with are peers. So something is being hidden there as well.

But back to the Fontaines. They are French barons who married the Russell baronets in the early 1800s, linking us to Bertrand Russell. We link directly from them to the Lennox (dukes of Richmond) and Campbells (dukes of Argyll) as well. Also to the Gordons, dukes of Gordon, the Maxwells, the Blairs, the Montgomeries, the Scotts, the Tait (Tates), the Kerrs, and the Darcys. Through the Haukes, the Fontaines link us to the Romanovs again, so that is convenient. What is that, four times now in the same paper? Sophie la Fontaine married the Graf von Hauke, and their daughter married the Prince von Hessen. He was a close cousin of the Wurttembergs, Sachsen, Preussen, and Romanovs.

It is with Sophie's father that the Jewish question finally gets admitted by the mainstream. Though he is scrubbed at thepeerage.com, Wiki has a page for this Dr. Franz la Fontaine. After claiming he was Polish and that he may have been Huguenot (the usual dodge for Jews), they admit he was from a family of rich merchants and that he married a Jew, Maria Kornely, whose father changed their name from Adelkind. He was a Polish court Jew pretending to convert to Catholicism. On la Fontaine's page, rather than from thepeerage.com, we learn his granddaughter became the Princess of Battenberg. Although born Julia Salomea Hauke from a Jewish grandmother in the maternal line, she is not listed as Jewish at Wiki. They somehow forgot that from one page to the other. Her children, who would also be Jewish, are listed as Marie, Princess of Erbach-Schonberg; Louis Mountbatten, 1st Marquess of Milford Haven, who married the Princess of Hesse and was the grandfather of Prince Philip; Alexander, Prince of Bulgaria, who married the Jewish soprano Johanna Loisinger; Prince Henry, who married Beatrice, daughter of Queen Victoria, and had Victoria Eugenie, later Queen of Spain; and Prince Francis, who married the Princess of Montenegro.

So, just in case you missed that, the Royal families of both Britain and Spain come directly from this Jewish Fontaine/Adelkind family. We previously found Prince Philip coming from the Jewish Jagiellons (and he admitted that), but now we have this Jewish line as well, coming in pretty recently.

We find more links between the Lafontaines and the Hesses in the British peerage as late as 1953, when Maria Lafontaine of Mexico married the Prince Christian von Hessen-Philippsthal-Barchfeld:

German or Jewish? He was the son of Prince William, and you may like to see what he looked like:

Does he look even remotely German? The second one is his grandfather, and the wig doesn't help him look German, either. Look at the huge nose and Habsburg jaw. But it gets worse:

That's the grandfather of the grandfather. Ouch. And the Hesse women weren't any better:

Would you still like to be a royal? You can be a billionaire but you have to look like a Hesse.

Also interesting is that this Prince Hesse's mother was Elizabeth Reid Rodgers of Jackson, Tennessee, the daughter of Richard Rodgers, Governor of Kentucky, and Eunice Tomlin (linking us to actress Lily Tomlin).

We will look at some more of these Fontaines just for fun. We will start with actress Joan Fontaine, who you may know as the sister of Olivia de Havilland. You may think Fontaine is a stage name, but isn't. It is her stepfather's name. Since the de Havillands were British nobility, we may assume Fontaine was of this French noble line we have been following. Joan's mother was a Ruse, formerly Rose, Rose/Ross being a Jewish name, explaining her acceptance in Hollywood. This is proved again by the fact that the de Havillands are listed in the British peerage, seeming to be there due to their link to the Molesworths, who were also. . . Roses. So Joan parents were cousins, as usual. Their Roses come from county Limerick, where they were also Pratts, Hamiltons, and Crosbies (Earls of Glandore). This also links us to the FitzMaurices, Earls of Kerry, and the Blighs (Earls of Darnley, linking us to the Mutiny on the Bounty fake). The Molesworths link us forward to the Fawcetts, including Farrah Fawcett. She also didn't come out of nowhere and wasn't chosen just for her pretty face.

It took some doing, but I tracked Joan's stepfather George Milan Fontaine back to Canada, where he may be related somehow to the 1st Baronet Sir Louis la Fontaine, the First Premier of Canada in 1842.

We are told the new Pope is black Creole on his mother's side, with black Catholics supposedly celebrating that they now have a black Pope for the first time. So let's see what we find. His grandparents on this side are Baquie and Martinez. The Baquies were actually from France, being French, but both of Louise Baquie's grandmothers were black or mulatto. So Louise was 3/8 black, according to Wikitree. Which makes the Pope 3/32 black on that side.

As it turns out, Martinez isn't Hispanic, since it was originally Martino. The grandfather was Italian, not Spanish or Mexican. He married a mulatto, giving us another 1/8. The other grandmother was also half black, giving us another 1/8. Making the Pope 5/32 black at most, in total. You can see why he doesn't look black or identify as black.

We do find one thing strange, indicating one of these may not be right. Prevost's 2g-grandmother Odile Copele is listed in 1840 and 1850 not as a slave, but as a slave owner and seller. So I am not convinced she was a mulatto, as claimed. However, it is interesting to see she was living in 1850 in New Orleans with white Blooms. Bloom is a Jewish name, short for Bloomfield. It is certainly not a French or Hispanic name.

We find that the Baquies were from Guadeloupe, where they were related to Brunels. Joseph Baquie's brother Marie Jean married Marguerite Brunel in 1803. That of course is highly interesting because the Brunels were French nobles. I remind you of Isambard Kingdom Brunel, the billionaire engineer who built the Great Western Railway in England. His father Sir Marc Brunel was French, being a Lefebvre through his mother. The Brunels were somehow tied to the Cohens. Historians do everything they can to scrub the Brunels and break the link, but I believe they are the same as the Lebruns, Dukes of Plaisance, and treasurers to kings and emperors (including Napoleon). We looked closely at Albert Lebrun in my paper on the Battle of France, since he was the President of France.

Another brother Charles Baquie married a Johnstone, the Johnstones being British nobles (Marquesses of Annandale) and American royalty. Another brother Jean Rose married Catherine Regnier du Timat, and she was the daughter of a knight. Her father was Sir Charles Regnier du Timat, a big slaveowner in Jamaica. The Regniers are French nobles, also known as Renieri in Italy, which links us to Ranieri and the guy in the NXIVM fake, Keith Raniere. A Regnier was involved in the French Revolution, see Charles Regnier, the Duke of Massa. He later supported Napoleon and was raised to Duke by him.

We can also look at the sister of Ferdinand Baquie, Maria Theresa, who married William Conrad Reinhard Quentell. The Quentells are minor German nobles.

What all this tells us is that although we found four slaves in the Pope's lines, that doesn't mean his ancestry is any less privileged on his mother's side. It is once again dotted with these noble French, German, Italian, and English lines, and that is exactly what we should have expected, since only rich slavers were sleeping with their slaves. Average white folks were not sleeping with slaves in that period, since they didn't have access to them. Slaves either bred with one another, or—if they were attractive females—they occasionally got snapped up by their masters. So this isn't a sign of distinction for the Pope regardless. It doesn't indicate he is diverse or multicultural, it just indicates his family liked to rape slaves back when they could.

I didn't find as many direct Jewish markers in his maternal line, since not as much is known of those families. But I did find some. And I remind you that the major slavers in the West Indies were Jewish.

They were the Phoenician Navy families who ran all the big ships necessary for this trade from Africa.
