

Measles Prevention

As measles cases continue to rise across the country, the North Carolina Department of Health and Human Services is taking proactive steps to ensure the state remains prepared for any potential cases or outbreaks. While there have been no reported cases of measles in North Carolina so far in 2025, public health officials are urging residents, health care providers and child care centers to take the necessary precautions to protect themselves, their communities and those at highest risk, especially unvaccinated children.

Important information about preparedness and prevention strategies can be found at the following sites:

- North Carolina Prepares for Measles Prevention Amid National Increase in Cases | NCDHHS
- Questions About Measles | Measles \(Rubeola\) | CDC
- Measles \(Rubeola\) | Division of Public Health
- Vaccines and the Diseases They Prevent | Vaccines & Immunizations | CDC
- N.C. Kindergarten Immunization Data Dashboard | Division of Public Health